Hunger and the drive to eat is a critical factor in the Obesity problem.

Hyperphagia is the extreme unsatisfied drive to consume food which is a hallmark characteristic of Prader-Willi syndrome and several other disorders, including Alstrom syndrome, WAGR syndrome, fragile X syndrome, Bardet-Biedel syndrome . Albright hereditary osteodystrophy and other single gene conditions.

Prader-Willi syndrome has been described as the Window of Opportunity to study the perplexing problems associated with Hunger. Hyperphagia is a cornerstone in the foundation of the worldwide problem of Obesity.

Hungry for a Cure

The First International Conference on Hyperphagia

Obesity has become the largest international public health problem in the developed countries. The insidious nature of overweight, the tragedy of severe Obesity and its co-morbidities and the severe burden to the cost structure of health care systems all combine to make Obesity – problem #1.

PWSA (USA) has recruited

- Leading scientists engaged in syndrome research will present the unique aspects of Hyperphagia and/or Obesity related to their disorder.
- Prominent international Hyperphagia scientific experts from academia and the NIH
- Partners from the pharmaceutical industry

Save the Date

June 4-5, 2009

PWSA (USA) is organizing a unique conference to look through the Window of Opportunity for solutions to these critical public health issues.

Please join the conference to Learn - Share - Strategize - Collaborate and help move forward the state of this perplexing science.

PWSA (USA) is seeking sponsorship for the conference. Details will be forthcoming. If interested in further information, please visit www.hyperphagia.org and complete the form posted on the site.
